Re-BUILT arises from the mimesis between form and structure, conventionally conceived as duality. Here, they build an indissoluble unit. In a clear exercise of nudity, the piece is presented stark and devoid of any remaining matter.

Todomuta (2011)

Todomuta Studio was born in 2011 under the artistic direction of Laura Molina and Sergio Herrera. The studio is characterized by constant research in both the formal and narrative framework, betting on a tireless search for new forms and perspectives that orbit around art and design, exploring its borders. A speech recognizable by its singularity, but without static laws.

Since its inception, the studio has opted for author's work and self-production, creating timeless objects far from the imitative trend of the market. A self-production that is characterized by an infinite care for detail, experimentation and enhancement of traditional craft production processes, giving them a current approach by making them coexist with the resources offered by new technologies; thus creating new connections both in the field of ideas and in the framework of production.
